

Learning from Television

Many parents ban children from watching television because they believe there is little educational value in TV programs and there are often inappropriate scenes in TV shows. However, there are a few TV programs that have real educational value.

News programs is one of the TV programs that can help us keep track of the latest events and supply us with new knowledge, such as the call President Tsai made to President Trump that astonished the world, or the new housekeeper robot Honda invented not long ago.

Other channels like the Discovery Channel and National Geography provide us with information about nature, science, and the universe that schools don't teach you. Most schools don't teach you about making your own robot. They also don't teach you about how to observe stars with a telescope, these programs do. By watching these programs, we achieve knowledge and facts that we don't believe at first.

I believe that watching correct TV programs can be very helpful in education. Whether TV programs have educational value or not depends on whether you chose the correct programs to watch.
