Studying abroad would be the best policy for students. As we all live in this global village, global perspective plays a firmly important role in our personality.

Although we can find tons of information on the Internet thanks to the highly developed technology nowadays, having one's own experience through traveling and studying abroad is completely different.

First of all, there is no denying that studying abroad will broaden our horizons.

Not only will the different cultures impress us, but the practical experiences and knowledge we gain from the locals teach is invaluable.

Moreover, understanding different cultures would help us learn the true essence of tolerance and consideration. The conventional local cultures will always give us some lessons from the wisdom given by their ancestors. These are the extraordinary rewards we gain which we cannot have if students do not go abroad.

Secondly, the real experience would definitely be better than the information we see on the Internet. Since there are too many data on the Internet, to differentiate what is fact what is false is really important. Therefore, experiencing it in person would be the most practical way to know if it is correct. For instance, some traveling advertisements would exaggerate a lot in order to gain attention and might raise traveling fees. If we have our own experiences and knowledge, we would easily distinguish between reality and fantasy. This would stop us from being tricked.

Last but not least, jumping out of our comfort zone would help us train our independency, communication ability and problem-solving. These necessary skills and abilities would not just benefit us when we study abroad; they also bring us opportunities when needed, such as job interviews and social networking. The best way to be trained is to be challenged and not be afraid of failing. The more failures one has, the more one learns, grows, and inspires to do better.

Studying abroad truly benefits every student. These desirable experiences would give the students a better future and outlook on life. Therefore, it is necessary for students to study abroad at least once in their life time.
